

FBI

WT

TRANSMIT VIA:

- Teletype
- Facsimile
- AIRTEL

PRECEDENCE:

- Immediate
- Priority
- Routine

CLASSIFICATION:

- TOP SECRET
- SECRET
- CONFIDENTIAL
- E F T O
- CLEAR

ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED
HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED
DATE 11/10/93 BY 9803 RJP/udm

TO: DIRECTOR, FBI
FROM: SAC, WFO (89-00)

LED Ryan

~~X~~ EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

ε

Enclosed for the Bureau is the original and five copies of a self-explanatory LHM. (u)

The Bureau is requested to disseminate enclosed LHM to the U.S. Department of Justice to obtain an opinion of policy on extraterritorial jurisdiction. (u)

AC

DE-5 89-4286-2203

16 MAY 23 1979

ENCLOSURE

2-Bureau (Enc. 6)
1-WFO

JRP:pep (3)

1-DOJ
5-23-79
DES/SRF

SM

247

Approved: JPS/glw

Transmitted

(Number)

(Time)

Per

FBI/DOJ

84 JUN 25 '79

X AIRTEL

5/22/79

TO: DIRECTOR, FBI
FROM: SAC, WFO (89-00)

4/10/93 9803 R01/nda

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

Enclosed for the Bureau is the original and five copies of a self-explanatory LHM. (u)

The Bureau is requested to disseminate enclosed LHM to the U.S. Department of Justice to obtain an opinion of policy on extraterritorial jurisdiction. (u)

2-Bureau (Enc. 6)
1-WFO

JRP:pep (3)

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Washington, D.C. 20535

May 22, 1979

In Reply, Please Refer to File No.

4/16/93 9803 RDD/ndm

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

(u)

The murder of Congressman Leo J. Ryan in Guyana caused an investigation to be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to identify those persons who murdered the Congressman and/or who conspired either in Guyana or in the United States to kill him. The U.S. Department of Justice advised that the Congressional Assassination Statute provides for extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction which allows the United States Government to prosecute persons identified as the assassins or co-conspirators who are located outside the United States should they be extradited to this country. (u)

In the May 21, 1979, edition of the Washington Post, Jack Anderson's column dealt with an alleged plot by drug dealers to kill members of a U.S. House of Representatives delegation on a fact finding mission in Southeast Asia. The helicopter carrying the Representatives was to be gunned down over the Burmese jungles. (u)

This scenario is similar to the situation in which Congressman Ryan was murdered, but with more evidence of a preconceived conspiracy. The position of the U.S. Department of Justice concerning extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction of the Congressional Assassination Statute would indicate that the FBI should also investigate this conspiracy. (u)

The problems and obstacles associated with such an investigation are immense. The probability of the successful completion of an investigation of a conspiracy wholly outside the United States is unclear. (u)

The position of the USDJ concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction should be clarified and the responsibility of the FBI in this area should be defined. If it is determined that the FBI has investigative responsibility in this area, guidelines (u)

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;
it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

89-13
ENCLOSURE

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

should be established concerning when and by whom investigation should be initiated. It should not be necessary for a Congressman to be killed before an investigation is begun if information concerning the conspiracy is available beforehand.

Jack Anderson

Drug Kingpins Plotted to Kill Hill Group

The assassination of Rep. Leo Ryan (D-Calif.) who was gunned down by the Rev. James Jones' religious fanatics at a jungle airstrip in Guyana last year, might reasonably have been a lesson to State Department personnel responsible for the safeguarding of world-traveling members of Congress.

But Foggy Bottom's bureaucrats were slow to learn the lesson. Several congressmen almost met the same fate as Ryan's last December in the steamy, Guyana-like jungles of Burma. Mere chance, say our sources, prevented their massacre at the hands of cold-blooded killers every bit as dangerous as the lunatic members of Jones' Peoples Temple.

It should be remembered that Ryan's death—and the 900 murder-suicides that followed it at the cult's Jonestown commune hours later—was sparked by a congressional investigation of the Peoples Temple. The congressman's concern for his former San Francisco-area constituents and the families they had left behind led him to make the investigative journey to Guyana that resulted in his murder.

Although the State Department representatives in Guyana did warn Ryan and his party that there were risks involved in his trip to Jonestown, precious little was done to ensure his safety once he insisted on proceeding despite the warnings.

Months later, when the lesson of Jonestown should have been digested by State Department security experts, several members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics left on a trip to the so-called Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia—the area of Burma, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam that is the center of the opium and heroin traffic in that part of the world.

This was no junket. The congressmen were going to a dangerous, uncomfortable corner of the globe to investigate the traffic in hard drugs, much of which ends up in the United States. They wanted to find out more about the men who control the world's richest narcotics market.

In an earlier column, we identified from intelligence documents the international kingpin of dope peddling—a Burmese mercenary named Chang Chi-fu.

Chang's fellow narcotics traffickers had been exposed by the Narcotics Committee, and the revelations had threatened to interfere with their billion-dollar dope operations. As ruthless as they are wealthy, the heroin merchants decided to eliminate congressional pressure on the local governments to crackdown on their lucrative trade.

The method was to be simple and direct, sources informed our associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta: A small army of mercenaries was prepared to kill the congressional visitors in Burma.

The House delegation, which included Reps. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.), Stephen Neal (D-N.C.), Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and Robert Dornan (R-Calif.) was to be gunned down as they were flying by helicopter over the Burmese jungles. Any survivors were to be dispatched

by heavily armed ground troops from the dope merchants' army of mercenary bandits.

According to confidential sources, only a lucky last-minute change in the schedule saved the congressmen's lives. They left Burma without knowing that it had almost become their last resting place. Months later they learned about the well-laid plot against their lives.

Footnote: A State Department spokesman told us he could not prepare a statement by the time we went to press.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Washington, D.C. 20535

May 22, 1979

In Reply, Please Refer to File No.

4/16/93

9803 RDD/mde

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

(u)

The murder of Congressman Leo J. Ryan in Guyana caused an investigation to be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to identify those persons who murdered the Congressman and/or who conspired either in Guyana or in the United States to kill him. The U.S. Department of Justice advised that the Congressional Assassination Statute provides for extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction which allows the United States Government to prosecute persons identified as the assassins or co-conspirators who are located outside the United States should they be extradited to this country (u)

In the May 21, 1979, edition of the Washington Post, Jack Anderson's column dealt with an alleged plot by drug dealers to kill members of a U.S. House of Representatives delegation on a fact finding mission in Southeast Asia. The helicopter carrying the Representatives was to be gunned down over the Burmese jungles (u)

This scenario is similar to the situation in which Congressman Ryan was murdered, but with more evidence of a preconceived conspiracy. The position of the U.S. Department of Justice concerning extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction of the Congressional Assassination Statute would indicate that the FBI should also investigate this conspiracy. (u)

The problems and obstacles associated with such an investigation are immense. The probability of the successful completion of an investigation of a conspiracy wholly outside the United States is unclear. (u)

The position of the USDJ concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction should be clarified and the responsibility of the FBI in this area should be defined. If it is determined that the FBI has investigative responsibility in this area, guidelines (u)

This document contains neither
recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency;
it and its contents are not to be
distributed outside your agency.

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

(u)

should be established concerning when and by whom investigation should be initiated. It should not be necessary for a Congressman to be killed before an investigation is begun if information concerning the conspiracy is available beforehand.

(u)

Jack Anderson

Drug Kingpins Plotted to Kill Hill Group

The assassination of Rep. Leo Ryan (D-Calif.) who was gunned down by the Rev. James Jones' religious fanatics at a jungle airstrip in Guyana last year, might reasonably have been a lesson to State Department personnel responsible for the safeguarding of world-traveling members of Congress.

But Foggy Bottom's bureaucrats were slow to learn the lesson. Several congressmen almost met the same fate as Ryan's last December in the steamy, Guyana-like jungles of Burma. Mere chance, say our sources, prevented their massacre at the hands of cold-blooded killers every bit as dangerous as the lunatic members of Jones' Peoples Temple.

It should be remembered that Ryan's death—and the 900 murder-suicides that followed it at the cult's Jonestown commune hours later—was sparked by a congressional investigation of the Peoples Temple. The congressman's concern for his former San Francisco-area constituents and the families they had left behind led him to make the investigative journey to Guyana that resulted in his murder.

Although the State Department representatives in Guyana did warn Ryan and his party that there were risks involved in his trip to Jonestown, precious little was done to ensure his safety once he insisted on proceeding despite the warnings.

Months later, when the lesson of Jonestown should have been digested by State Department security experts, several members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics left on a trip to the so-called Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia—the area of Burma, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam that is the center of the opium and heroin traffic in that part of the world.

This was no junket. The congressmen were going to a dangerous, uncomfortable corner of the globe to investigate the traffic in hard drugs, much of which ends up in the United States. They wanted to find out more about the men who control the world's richest narcotics market.

In an earlier column, we identified rom intelligence documents the international kingpin of dope peddling—a Burmese mercenary named Chang Chi-fu.

Chang's fellow narcotics traffickers had been exposed by the Narcotics Committee, and the revelations had threatened to interfere with their billion-dollar dope operations. As ruthless as they are wealthy, the heroin merchants decided to eliminate congressional pressure on the local governments to crackdown on their lucrative trade.

The method was to be simple and direct, sources informed our associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta: A small army of mercenaries was prepared to kill the congressional visitors in Burma.

The House delegation, which included Reps. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.), Stephen Neal (D-N.C.), Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and Robert Dornan (R-Calif.) was to be gunned down as they were flying by helicopter over the Burmese jungles. Any survivors were to be dispatched

by heavily armed ground troops from the dope merchants' army of mercenary bandits.

According to confidential sources, only a lucky last-minute change in the schedule saved the congressmen's lives. They left Burma without knowing that it had almost become their last resting place. Months later they learned about the well-laid plot against their lives.

Footnote: A State Department spokesman told us he could not prepare a statement by the time we went to press.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Washington, D.C. 20535

May 22, 1979

In Reply, Please Refer to File No.

4/14/93

9803 (EDD) / mclm

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE (u)

The murder of Congressman Leo J. Ryan in Guyana caused an investigation to be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to identify those persons who murdered the Congressman and/or who conspired either in Guyana or in the United States to kill him. The U.S. Department of Justice advised that the Congressional Assassination Statute provides for extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction which allows the United States Government to prosecute persons identified as the assassins or co-conspirators who are located outside the United States should they be extradited to this country. (u)

In the May 21, 1979, edition of the Washington Post, Jack Anderson's column dealt with an alleged plot by drug dealers to kill members of a U.S. House of Representatives delegation on a fact finding mission in Southeast Asia. The helicopter carrying the Representatives was to be gunned down over the Burmese jungles. (u)

This scenario is similar to the situation in which Congressman Ryan was murdered, but with more evidence of a preconceived conspiracy. The position of the U.S. Department of Justice concerning extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction of the Congressional Assassination Statute would indicate that the FBI should also investigate this conspiracy. (u)

The problems and obstacles associated with such an investigation are immense. The probability of the successful completion of an investigation of a conspiracy wholly outside the United States is unclear. (u)

The position of the USDJ concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction should be clarified and the responsibility of the FBI in this area should be defined. If it is determined that the FBI has investigative responsibility in this area, guidelines (u)

This document contains neither
recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of
the FBI and is loaned to your agency;
it and its contents are not to be
distributed outside your agency.

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE (u)

should be established concerning when and by whom investigation should be initiated. It should not be necessary for a Congressman to be killed before an investigation is begun if information concerning the conspiracy is available beforehand. (u)

Jack Anderson

Drug Kingpins Plotted to Kill Hill Group

The assassination of Rep. Leo Ryan (D-Calif.) who was gunned down by the Rev. James Jones' religious fanatics at a jungle airstrip in Guyana last year, might reasonably have been a lesson to State Department personnel responsible for the safeguarding of world-traveling members of Congress.

But Foggy Bottom's bureaucrats were slow to learn the lesson. Several congressmen almost met the same fate as Ryan's last December in the steamy, Guyana-like jungles of Burma. Mere chance, say our sources, prevented their massacre at the hands of cold-blooded killers every bit as dangerous as the lunatic members of Jones' Peoples Temple.

It should be remembered that Ryan's death—and the 900 murder-suicides that followed it at the cult's Jonestown commune hours later—was sparked by a congressional investigation of the Peoples Temple. The congressman's concern for his former San Francisco-area constituents and the families they had left behind led him to make the investigative journey to Guyana that resulted in his murder.

Although the State Department representatives in Guyana did warn Ryan and his party that there were risks involved in his trip to Jonestown, precious little was done to ensure his safety once he insisted on proceeding despite the warnings.

Months later, when the lesson of Jonestown should have been digested by State Department security experts, several members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics left on a trip to the so-called Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia—the area of Burma, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam that is the center of the opium and heroin traffic in that part of the world.

This was no junket. The congressmen were going to a dangerous, uncomfortable corner of the globe to investigate the traffic in hard drugs, much of which ends up in the United States. They wanted to find out more about the men who control the world's richest narcotics market.

In an earlier column, we identified rom intelligence documents the international kingpin of dope peddling—a Burmese mercenary named Chang Chi-fu.

Chang's fellow narcotics traffickers had been exposed by the Narcotics Committee, and the revelations had threatened to interfere with their billion-dollar dope operations. As ruthless as they are wealthy, the heroin merchants decided to eliminate congressional pressure on the local governments to crackdown on their lucrative trade.

The method was to be simple and direct, sources informed our associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta: A small army of mercenaries was prepared to kill the congressional visitors in Burma.

The House delegation, which included Reps. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.), Stephen Neal (D-N.C.), Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and Robert Dornan (R-Calif.) was to be gunned down as they were flying by helicopter over the Burmese jungles. Any survivors were to be dispatched

by heavily armed ground troops from the dope merchants' army of mercenary bandits.

According to confidential sources, only a lucky last-minute change in the schedule saved the congressmen's lives. They left Burma without knowing that it had almost become their last resting place. Months later they learned about the well-laid plot against their lives.

Footnote: A State Department spokesman told us he could not prepare a statement by the time we went to press.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Washington, D.C. 20535

May 22, 1979

In Reply, Please Refer to File No.

4/16/93
9803200/pela

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE (u)

The murder of Congressman Leo J. Ryan in Guyana caused an investigation to be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to identify those persons who murdered the Congressman and/or who conspired either in Guyana or in the United States to kill him. The U.S. Department of Justice advised that the Congressional Assassination Statute provides for extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction which allows the United States Government to prosecute persons identified as the assassins or co-conspirators who are located outside the United States should they be extradited to this country (u)

In the May 21, 1979, edition of the Washington Post, Jack Anderson's column dealt with an alleged plot by drug dealers to kill members of a U.S. House of Representatives delegation on a fact finding mission in Southeast Asia. The helicopter carrying the Representatives was to be gunned down over the Burmese jungles. (u)

This scenario is similar to the situation in which Congressman Ryan was murdered, but with more evidence of a preconceived conspiracy. The position of the U.S. Department of Justice concerning extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction of the Congressional Assassination Statute would indicate that the FBI should also investigate this conspiracy. (u)

The problems and obstacles associated with such an investigation are immense. The probability of the successful completion of an investigation of a conspiracy wholly outside the United States is unclear. (u)

The position of the USDJ concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction should be clarified and the responsibility of the FBI in this area should be defined. If it is determined that the FBI has investigative responsibility in this area, guidelines (u)

This document contains neither
recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of
the FBI and is loaned to your agency;
it and its contents are not to be
distributed outside your agency.

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

should be established concerning when and by whom investigation should be initiated. It should not be necessary for a Congressman to be killed before an investigation is begun if information concerning the
conspiracy is available beforehand.

Jack Anderson

Drug Kingpins Plotted to Kill Hill Group

The assassination of Rep. Leo Ryan (D-Calif.) who was gunned down by the Rev. James Jones' religious fanatics at a jungle airstrip in Guyana last year, might reasonably have been a lesson to State Department personnel responsible for the safeguarding of world-traveling members of Congress.

But Foggy Bottom's bureaucrats were slow to learn the lesson. Several congressmen almost met the same fate as Ryan's last December in the steamy, Guyana-like jungles of Burma. Mere chance, say our sources, prevented their massacre at the hands of cold-blooded killers every bit as dangerous as the lunatic members of Jones' Peoples Temple.

It should be remembered that Ryan's death—and the 900 murder-suicides that followed it at the cult's Jonestown commune hours later—was sparked by a congressional investigation of the Peoples Temple. The congressman's concern for his former San Francisco-area constituents and the families they had left behind led him to make the investigative journey to Guyana that resulted in his murder.

Although the State Department representatives in Guyana did warn Ryan and his party that there were risks involved in his trip to Jonestown, precious little was done to ensure his safety once he insisted on proceeding despite the warnings.

Months later, when the lesson of Jonestown should have been digested by State Department security experts, several members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics left on a trip to the so-called Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia—the area of Burma, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam that is the center of the opium and heroin traffic in that part of the world.

This was no junket. The congressmen were going to a dangerous, uncomfortable corner of the globe to investigate the traffic in hard drugs, much of which ends up in the United States. They wanted to find out more about the men who control the world's richest narcotics market.

In an earlier column, we identified rom intelligence documents the international kingpin of dope peddling—a Burmese mercenary named Chang Chi-fu.

Chang's fellow narcotics traffickers had been exposed by the Narcotics Committee, and the revelations had threatened to interfere with their billion-dollar dope operations. As ruthless as they are wealthy, the heroin merchants decided to eliminate congressional pressure on the local governments to crackdown on their lucrative trade.

The method was to be simple and direct, sources informed our associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta: A small army of mercenaries was prepared to kill the congressional visitors in Burma.

The House delegation, which included Reps. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.), Stephen Neal (D-N.C.), Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and Robert Dornan (R-Calif.) was to be gunned down as they were flying by helicopter over the Burmese jungles. Any survivors were to be dispatched

by heavily armed ground troops from the dope merchants' army of mercenary bandits.

According to confidential sources, only a lucky last-minute change in the schedule saved the congressmen's lives. They left Burma without knowing that it had almost become their last resting place. Months later they learned about the well-laid plot against their lives.

Footnote: A State Department spokesman told us he could not prepare a statement by the time we went to press.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Washington, D.C. 20535

May 22, 1979

In Reply, Please Refer to File No.

4/16/93 9803 RDD/ndn

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION--
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE (u)

The murder of Congressman Leo J. Ryan in Guyana caused an investigation to be conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to identify those persons who murdered the Congressman and/or who conspired either in Guyana or in the United States to kill him. The U.S. Department of Justice advised that the Congressional Assassination Statute provides for extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction which allows the United States Government to prosecute persons identified as the assassins or co-conspirators who are located outside the United States should they be extradited to this country (u)

In the May 21, 1979, edition of the Washington Post, Jack Anderson's column dealt with an alleged plot by drug dealers to kill members of a U.S. House of Representatives delegation on a fact finding mission in Southeast Asia. The helicopter carrying the Representatives was to be gunned down over the Burmese jungles. (u)

This scenario is similar to the situation in which Congressman Ryan was murdered, but with more evidence of a preconceived conspiracy. The position of the U.S. Department of Justice concerning extraterritorial prosecutive jurisdiction of the Congressional Assassination Statute would indicate that the FBI should also investigate this conspiracy. (u)

The problems and obstacles associated with such an investigation are immense. The probability of the successful completion of an investigation of a conspiracy wholly outside the United States is unclear. (u)

The position of the USDOJ concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction should be clarified and the responsibility of the FBI in this area should be defined. If it is determined that the FBI has investigative responsibility in this area, guidelines (u)

1. The FBI should be notified of any...
2. The FBI should be notified of any...
3. The FBI should be notified of any...
4. The FBI should be notified of any...
5. The FBI should be notified of any...

EXTRATERRITORIAL JURISDICTION-
CONGRESSIONAL ASSASSINATION STATUTE

should be established concerning when and by whom investigation should be initiated. It should not be necessary for a Congressman to be killed before an investigation is begun if information concerning the
conspiracy is available beforehand.

Jack Anderson

Drug Kingpins Plotted to Kill Hill Group

The assassination of Rep. Leo Ryan (D-Calif.) who was gunned down by the Rev. James Jones' religious fanatics at a jungle airstrip in Guyana last year, might reasonably have been a lesson to State Department personnel responsible for the safeguarding of world-traveling members of Congress.

But Foggy Bottom's bureaucrats were slow to learn the lesson. Several congressmen almost met the same fate as Ryan's last December in the steamy, Guyana-like jungles of Burma. Mere chance, say our sources, prevented their massacre at the hands of cold-blooded killers every bit as dangerous as the lunatic members of Jones' Peoples Temple.

It should be remembered that Ryan's death—and the 900 murder-suicides that followed it at the cult's Jonestown commune hours later—was sparked by a congressional investigation of the Peoples Temple. The congressman's concern for his former San Francisco-area constituents and the families they had left behind led him to make the investigative journey to Guyana that resulted in his murder.

Although the State Department representatives in Guyana did warn Ryan and his party that there were risks involved in his trip to Jonestown, precious little was done to ensure his safety once he insisted on proceeding despite the warnings.

Months later, when the lesson of Jonestown should have been digested by State Department security experts, several members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics left on a trip to the so-called Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia—the area of Burma, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam that is the center of the opium and heroin traffic in that part of the world.

This was no junket. The congressmen were going to a dangerous, uncomfortable corner of the globe to investigate the traffic in hard drugs, much of which ends up in the United States. They wanted to find out more about the men who control the world's richest narcotics market.

In an earlier column, we identified from intelligence documents the international kingpin of dope peddling—a Burmese mercenary named Chang Chi-fu.

Chang's fellow narcotics traffickers had been exposed by the Narcotics Committee, and the revelations had threatened to interfere with their billion-dollar dope operations. As ruthless as they are wealthy, the heroin merchants decided to eliminate congressional pressure on the local governments to crackdown on their lucrative trade.

The method was to be simple and direct, sources informed our associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta: A small army of mercenaries was prepared to kill the congressional visitors in Burma.

The House delegation, which included Reps. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.), Stephen Neal (D-N.C.), Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and Robert Dornan (R-Calif.) was to be gunned down as they were flying by helicopter over the Burmese jungles. Any survivors were to be dispatched

by heavily armed ground troops from the dope merchants' army of mercenary bandits.

According to confidential sources, only a lucky last-minute change in the schedule saved the congressmen's lives. They left Burma without knowing that it had almost become their last resting place. Months later they learned about the well-laid plot against their lives.

Footnote: A State Department spokesman told us he could not prepare a statement by the time we went to press.